This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: ...The sale price of coal at the mine may be divided into 1. Cost of coal in the ground. %. Cost of mining, transporting to surface, and washing or preparing for the market. 3. Profit. The cost of coal in the ground may be calculated in different ways, such as the cost of the coal when purchased as coal land, either from the government or from individuals. In the first case the former price was twenty dollars per acre if the area was within fifteen miles of a completed railroad, and ten dollars per acre if more than fifteen miles away. This law was in force prior to 1906. Since then the law has been changed and all unoccupied lands are now classified as coal or non-coal land and sold according to a tonnage estimate of the coal in the ground at so much per ton. In purchasing from an individual the surface right might be separate from the right to mine coal. The cost of coal might also be the royalty paid on a leasehold at so much per ton and with a minimum yearly royalty. The cost of removing the coal from the ground and preparing it for market includes all costs of equipment, labor, materials, interest on the investment, cost of marketing and amortization (or a fund laid aside for recouping the equipment when rendered useless). It includes also an accident or insurance fund. These costs are usually considered "fixed charges." The profit, if any, is necessarily the difference between all the costs combined and the selling price of the coal. In purchasing an area underlain with coal it is always necessary to consider how long it will be before the coal is actually mined and marketed. This is an important item, for it is necessary to figure the interest on the investment and the accumulating taxes. The price per ton at which a coal can be leased and pai...
