Character Building Booker T. Washington

As president of the Tuskegee Institute, Booker T. Washington made it his habit to deliver an address to his students every Sunday night. Washington was not only concerned with a giving his students a technical education, but with teaching them how to be successful in both the moral and commercial realm. These collected lectures are all on topics of character building and living a moral life and include subjects such as "The Virtue of Simplicity", "Keeping Your Word", "Object Lessons" and "Individual Opportunities".
