Throw Caution To The Wind . . . Almost a True Story Lou Christine

The story's protagonist, Lou Christine, has been jilted by a woman named Mik yet he's secretly in love with the actress Carrie Fisher. His buddy talked him into coming to Atlantic City to help him liquidate his furniture business the year before and there are still repercussions from that trip. He's in a financial fix. His world has turned to shit. He's crossed the point of no return. He's trudging down the Atlantic City boardwalk on his way to the casino. If he doesn't win $250,000 dollars that very night he's going to kill himself! Meanwhile Carl and Phil, two dufuses and Philadelphia truck drivers with their beat and overweight wives, Gloria and Vivian, are on a day trip to the shore with the kids. Carl hopes to sneak away to the tables at the casino for what he calls a "Mad Hour!"

Young Johnny Lombardi, viral and handsome works the crap tables has his own pressures with his boss and is mixed up about the love of his life Candy, yet his whore monger buddy wants to fix him up that night with two, older, married strumpets.

Louis Virgo, an international henchman is planning on robbing the casino that night. There's 45 million up for grabs.

All on are a collision course delivered in mosaic fashion as an allegory work of fiction told in first and third person.
