The Unlimited Operation: Vodka Lullabies to the Goodnight Moon (Collected Poems of Walter Adler Book 1) Walter Adler

This is my first collected anthology of 99 poems (some compiled) written while dating, courting, loving and fighting besides four incredible Post-Soviet women.

These poems did not write themselves great women brought them forth. It is very hard to date a mad man, a zealot driven by unseen forces which make him think battling demons and storming castles and changing whole worlds is possible carrying her standard. None of these loves was a perfect love, if such a thing exists. These were hard and glorious women and I attempted to love each fearlessly in art and war. It should be said that like the Great Soviet poet laureate Vladimir Vladimirovich Mayakovsky, to whom I also dedicate this first anthem of my collected poem.

I have been accused of loving Russian women, I find this trivial. I loved great women. It so happens that many were born in the former Soviet Union. Dedicated to all involved and dedicated to the future. Broken ripped out hearts, violent fuck, romance and adventures; I regret nothing, only cruel words said when love like the phoenix dies. These four women have made me hard enough to do the rough work ahead, poems: silly poems! What are poems to heroic deeds. They are only promises to unlimited operations to come.
