Excerpt from A Discourse Suggested by Weir's Picture of the Embarkation of the Pilgrims, Vol. 2: Delivered in the Unitarian Church, Washington, December 31st, 1843

We have hears with our ears, O God, our fathers have told us, what work thou didst ill their days, in the limes of old;

For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them; but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favor unto them. - Psalm xlv., 1 and 3.

The subject of my present remarks has been suggested to me by the sight of that noble work of art, which has recently been added to the decorations of our chief public edifice - the picture of the Embarkation of the Pilgrims. It seemed to me, as I looked on that living representation of a most memorable scene, connected as it is with all the dearest associations of the patriot and the holiest feelings of the Christian, as if its elevation to the place it is permanently to occupy should have been attended with some solemn service of consecration, in which assembled throngs should have recognised, with the prayer of gratitude, the blessing of that God to whom their fathers had knelt with the prayer of faith and earnest supplication. Such a service probably would not have been consistent with the rules which custom has prescribed. And it was not needed. Henceforth that hall is consecrated - by the power of genius to the silent worship of the heart to the God of our fathers. Many a prayer will ascend, through years and ages to come, from those who gaze on the imagined resemblances of the great and good who knelt on the deck of that humble vessel; many a statesman, as he gazes there, will kindle the flame of patriotism to brighter radiance from the altar of piety; and many a pure, ingenuous youth will learn from that pictured scene to pursue with renewed ardor the course set before him, and to merit the high titles of servant of God, friend of his country, benefactor of his race.
